V.

Opinion Filed.

This appeal arises from an order of the District Court granting summary judgment in favor of the appellee. The appellant contends that the court erred in finding no genuine dispute of material fact regarding the contractual ambiguity. Upon review of the record and the relevant precedents, we find the appellant's arguments persuasive.

We review a grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. Summary judgment is appropriate only if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. We must view the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

The contract at issue contains an integration clause, stating that the written document represents the final and complete agreement between the parties. While parol evidence is generally inadmissible to contradict the terms of an integrated contract, it may be admitted to resolve an ambiguity that is apparent on the face of the agreement.

1 II. DISCUSSION

2 For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the District Court erred in its application of state contract law. Genuine
3 disputes of material fact remain concerning the intent of the parties. Accordingly, the judgment of the District Court is 4 reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

7 ⁵ Under state law, a promise is binding if the promisor makes a clear representation and the promisee relies upon it to their detriment. See, e.g., Kevin
8 Nguyen v. Gill PLC, 340 F.2d 843 (7th Cir. 1992).
